Ordinary Time
Thirtieth Sunday

Be Merciful To Me, A Sinner

Today we reflect on the attitudes one brings to prayer rather than on the prayer itself; self-righteousness or humility.

Jesus tells the parable about the Pharisee and the tax collector who go to the temple to pray. The Pharisee does not actually pray. Rather, he explains to God why he is better than other people. In contrast, the tax collector knows that he is a sinner. His is a prayer of petition: "O God, be merciful to me, a sinner."

Pharisee or Tax Collector

The Pharisee is not a horrible villain, nor is the tax collector a hero. Despite his arrogance, the Pharisee is, in fact, a pillar of the community, faithful and dependable.

Because of his generous tithing, the salaries of ministers are paid so that they can preach on this parable. This problem is that his prayer and his life are out of sync. It is the same with the tax collector. While his prayer for mercy is in the best spirit of penitence, his life is not. Neither character can be absolutely embraced or dismissed. Each simply shows us a side of ourselves that needs integration.

REFLECTION

Judgment Belongs To God

Luke displays wonderful irony in his story of the Pharisee and the tax collector. Throughout the gospel, Luke has contrasted the genuine faith of sinners and foreigners with the hypocrisy of self-righteous insiders.

The Pharisee of this story places himself far above other people on his own merits: He notes commandment-breakers – of whom he is not one. He draws God’s attention to the outcast tax collector, to whom he bears no resemblance. God is then reminded that every Monday and Thursday the Pharisee fasts and that all his food is “clean” (it has been tithed); he made his ritual harvest – festival offering on all that he had. He believes that his scrupulous practices make him better than anyone else, particularly those he considers sinners. But his very words condemn him and betray his own heritage.

By contrast, the tax collector relies on God for his justification: This man clearly sees how he stands before God. He has nothing to offer. Even his own people have cast him away from society because of his collusion with Roman authority as a collector of the Emperor’s taxes. His penitence (beating the breast was and is a common gesture for penitents) leaves room for God to act and he is made right before God by God’s grace and his own humility.

The conclusion Jesus draws from the story is that judgment belongs to God. The tax collector knows how he stands with God. The Pharisee works in complete illusion. For the tax collector, God sets the requirements of their relationship; the Pharisee makes his own rules and sets his own standards. One man knows in the depths of his being that he is not God; the other is overwhelmed by a striking resemblance.
